Incidences by Daniil Kharms - Goodreads

Daniil Kharms was born in 1906. Kharms was arrested in 1931 for 'deflecting the people from the building of socialism by means of "trans-verse" verses' and told that he could only publish writing for children. By the end of the decade, even his writing for children was considered unfit for publication and in 1941 Kharms was re-arrested and

One of the last members of the Russian avant-garde was Kharms (1905-42), a Leningrader who combined a taste for the absurd with a mastery of the miniature. He wrote tiny "incidences," which are absurdist parables in which it seems that Kafka and a circus clown collaborate in commenting on daily life in Stalin's Soviet Union.

Daniil Kharms (Daniil Ivanovich Yuvachev, 1905-1942) was a Russian poet and author now considered a classic of the Russian absurd literature of the 1930s. He was arrested in 1941 on false charges, was "determined" to be insane and died of maltreatment and starvation in a psychiatric ward as St. Petersburg (then Leningrad) was besieged by the Nazis.

Incidences by Kharms, Daniil, Cornwell, Neil - Amazon.ae

Ironically, earlier in the week, I had been reading the Russian avant-garde writer Daniil Kharms's Incidences, a series of fragmented and surreal stories about city life. The grocery store is probably the central topos of these tales, which ceaselessly stage the consumerist indifference to and instrumentalization of others along the individual pursuit of self-advancement.
